Overview

The purpose of oboe class is to prepare students for the needs of the Duke Ellington School of Music ensembles, solo recitals, and college entrance auditions.

Methods for Success

In order to achieve a high level of competence and artistry on the instrument, students will be expected to develop proper technique, and proficient music and sight-reading skills. In order to do so, the student must engage in regular practice sessions, with a focus on careful and consistent preparation.

Note: Although not all students will (or are expected to) pursue a career in music, the study of music will teach other important skills that will be invaluable in all areas of life-- personal responsibility, punctuality, work ethic, focus, perseverance, dedication, time management, self-expression, and creative problem solving skills.
